The Journal of English for Research Publication Purposes publishes reviews of recent authored and edited publications focusing on various aspects of English for research publication purposes (ERPP). Reviews can be commissioned by the Book Review Editor, and also be sent to the Book Review Editor by potential authors who may have identified a book of interest to JERPP readers. Reviewers should ensure that there are no conflicts of interest between reviewers and authors. In all cases, reviewers should contact the Book Review Editor Sally Burgess (sburgess@ull.edu.es) concerning their proposed book of interest before submitting the review. Reviews that discuss several books that contribute to an aspect of ERPP theory, research and practice are also possible. Reviews of individual books should be 1500-2500 words in length. Reviews of multiple texts should be longer, up to 3500 words.

While book reviews provide a summary of the contents of the book, their essential function is to analyze and comment critically. They should also address the readership of JERPP. Key elements in a book review are normally:

- the intended audience for the book and who would find it of use and interest
- the context or impetus for the book (e.g. as a publishing outcome of a conference or meeting)
- the main objectives the book seeks to fulfil and how successfully these have been achieved
- constructive comments on the strengths and weaknesses of the book
- for edited volumes, a summary of the areas covered in the book as a whole and of the contents of individual chapters
- implications of the book for research, policy and practice

The header of the review should include:

- Author(s) or editor(s) first and last name(s) (please indicate if it is an edited book)
- Title of book
- Year of publication
- Place of publication and publisher
- Number of pages
- Price (please indicate paperback, hard cover or e-book)

At the end of the review, please include:

- Your first and last name
- Institutional affiliation
